WHAT WE DO

The secret to inquiry generating websites

We've analyzed what makes photographer websites convert, and it comes down to a handful of specific questions visitors need answered before they feel confident reaching out. We reverse-engineered that into an ideal layout shown below that turns a beautiful website into one to get you fully booked.

1

What can you do for me?

Within seconds: Am I in the right place? Do you serve people like me? What's the next step? This is your hero section.

2

Why should I trust you?

They want to connect with you, but framed around their desires and pain points, not just facts about you. This is your guide section.

3

What is it like to work with you?

A clear snapshot of your services with an easy path to learn more — words and photos working together. This is your portfolio section.

4

Have you done this before?

Social proof that you've delivered — even if they don't read every word, testimonials build enormous trust. This is your testimonial section.

5

How do I get started?

Make the next step unmissable — and use it to showcase what makes working with you special from start to finish. This is your steps section.

When these questions are answered clearly and in order, visitors move naturally toward your contact form. Here is what I found on your site:

Your homepage doesn't yet show why you

WHAT I NOTICED

Your hero leads with your name and a description of your style but it's lacking anything that would uniquely call out your dream clients. Secondly, there's no button pointing couples to a next step. Someone scanning quickly can't feel what's distinctly you.

WHY IT MATTERS

When your homepage doesn't set you apart in the first few seconds, couples inquire with you and several others who feel interchangeable. You become one quote among many, and when you follow up there's no clear reason to pick you. That's exactly the moment couples go quiet.

HOW TO MAKE IT RIGHT

- * A hero that names the specific couple you serve and the experience you deliver, with one clear call-to-action button so the next step is obvious
- * A guide section right after it that positions you as a person and a personal brand, not just a service, so couples connect with the supply of one that only you can be
- * Language framed around what your dream couple wants, not just your style words

Your proof is buried, so the price arrives before the trust

WHAT I NOTICED

Your work clearly earns what you charge, but the site gives couples little to stand on. I found a single testimonial, low contrast and near the bottom, easy to scroll right past, and your pricing appears before that trust is built. Couples meet the $5.5K number before they're convinced you're the obvious choice.

WHY IT MATTERS

For a wedding investment this size, couples need to see, more than once, that you've delivered this exact experience for people like them. When the proof is thin or hidden, that gap between beautiful and proven is often the precise moment a couple cools off and stops replying.

HOW TO MAKE IT RIGHT

- ✱ Testimonials surfaced throughout the homepage with real names and weddings
- ✱ A guide section that frames your experience around your couple's hopes and worries, so trust is built before the number appears
- ✱ A guide section that frames your experience around your couple's hopes and worries, so trust is built before the number appears

The only next step is a big one, with no on-ramp

WHAT I NOTICED

The single path on your site is to fill out the inquiry form and book a consultation. There's no smaller step for a couple who loves your photos but isn't quite ready, no pricing guide, no way to stay in touch, and no picture of what happens after they reach out.

WHY IT MATTERS

Couples who aren't fully sold either send a lukewarm inquiry and vanish the moment a consultation feels like a lot, or they never raise their hand at all. Without a lower-commitment way in, the warm-but-not-ready couples, the ones most likely to ghost, quietly slip away.

HOW TO MAKE IT RIGHT

- * A steps section that shows exactly what happens after they inquire, so reaching out feels safe instead of scary
- * Calls to action throughout the page, not just in the header, so the next move is always clear
- * A freebie that captures the not-ready couples' emails and keeps them in your world until they're ready to book

WHAT HAPPENS NEXT

Your site is closer than you think to converting visitors into bookings.

You can absolutely take what I shared and work on it yourself, and those changes will help. It's kind of like editing a RAW photo. You can push it pretty far in post by tweaking, but at some point you realize the foundation like lighting and settings had to be right from the start. Your website works the same way. The biggest shift happens when the whole site is built from the ground up with the right strategy.

Captured Sites approaches your website like a client-generating machine, because that's exactly how you're going to get more of the inquiries you want.

And this is what we do all day, every day, exclusively for photographers. Done for you websites with SEO build in, and I love doing it. If you want to explore what it would look like to have it completely handled for you, I'd love to show you.
